From COS mendicino: Update from my dm:

ON sent a letter to the OPP Commissioner late last night, which was physically shared with protestors. The letter was signed by Minister Jones and committed to a meeting with protestors at a time and place of her choosing. There were no other conditions. Owing to the late hour, the letter did not have much effect and enforcement is proceeding today.

- The risk to the signatory and government rep at a later meeting is low, assuming the meeting is virtual.

- Armed with a letter, police liaison would target the most reasonable leaders (I have three names as of now). PLT can be instructed to avoid engaging with certain leaders and to make clear that some people would not be welcome at a later meeting.

Thanks

When the opp come to Ottawa to take over they can employ
